Laura McGowan is an oil painter, who lives and works on the Eastern Shore of Virginia. She grew up in New Jersey and earned a Bachelor of Fine Arts from Pratt Institute. Her first career was in interior and graphic design in New York and London. In 1994, Laura moved to Onancock, Virginia, and became a teacher, where she introduced children to various art styles, media and a love of creating. Seeking to reconnect with making her own art, Laura studied oil painting with Carole Boggemann Peirson. She left teaching in 2016 to become a full-time artist.

Landscapes, seascapes and still lifes are her favorite subjects. She combines studio work with plein air painting. “I have always been drawn to images and environments that evoke emotion. I want people to see my paintings and pause, drawn in with a feeling of joy, melancholy, peacefulness, a treasured memory and/or longing. Capturing a certain light often creates this mood, and for me, oils serve best to communicate it. I paint en plein air or alla prima when possible but sometimes spend many hours on a painting to achieve what I have in mind. I am influenced by the American tonalists as well as the artists of the Barbizon School for their use of light and landscape to convey the spirit of a place and time,” she said.

Laura shows her work in galleries in Virginia, Delaware and New Jersey, and she also teaches oil painting classes. She participates in many regional art shows and festivals and has won numerous awards in the Paint Onancock plein air event, the Virginia Eastern Shore Land Trust’s Paint the Shore event and the Eastern Shore Art League’s Member Show and Sale.
